On cross-country trek

Visiting vet has special mission

By BILL SHERROD

Chris Hayden is on a mission.

This mission is different from those he engaged in while serving two tours of duty in Vietnam as a Marine Corps helicopter door gunner. He's not dodging enemy fire.

But he feels the goals of this mission are as important as any goal he has ever pursued.

Hayden, a 37-year-old Ohio native who currently lives in Montrose, Colorado, left California's Norton Air Force Base March 11, headed for Washington, D.C. He wasn't going to the nation's capital for a vacation. He left Norton AFB on foot, and during his cross-country trek, he planned to talk to as many people as possible in an awareness program aimed at benefiting veterans, particularly Vietnam era veterans.

Hayden, whose wife Jill is following him in a support vehicle, was in Appomattox Thursday discussing his journey.

"We're trying to bring attention to the problems facing veterans," says Hayden, who served in Vietnam from 1968-67, and from 1969-70.

"Our only three goals on this trip are to try and encourage employers to hire veterans; to remind people that there are still more than 2,400 people missing in action (MIA) and unaccounted for in Vietnam; and to promote membership in service organizations such as the Veterans Of Foreign Wars, Disabled American Veterans, and American Legion," explains Hayden.

"The Department of Labor and other job service organizations have information on programs that encourage employment of veterans, such as the Emergency Veterans Job Program," notes Hayden. "We're trying to get employers to take advantage of these programs."

And, Hayden says, "We don't want people to forget about the MIAs or their families. A lot of the MIA families believe their MIAs are still alive; there have been reports from people who have escaped from Vietnam that there are still American servicemen being held prisoner there."

Regarding Hayden's third goal - promotion of interest in service organizations - he notes that many of the groups have helped him in that goal, organizing receptions along his route.

When he arrives in Washington, D.C. July 1, there will be a reception for Hayden at the Vietnam War Memorial. At that reception will be dignitaries, representatives of the various service organizations, and representatives from the National League of MIA and POW Families.

Following that, there will be an indoor reception at the Veteran's Memorial Hall.

Hayden, who traveled through California, Arizona, New Mexico, Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, and Tennessee before arriving in Virginia, notes that "many interesting things have happened on this trip. We've been keeping a diary, and we may write a book when it's all over.

"I was not a runner (before starting this trip)," Hayden adds. He started his training by walking the five miles to his job at an interior decoration store in Montrose. From there he worked up to running one or two miles a day.

"Most of my serious running didn't start until I had actually gotten on the road. I'd run a few miles, and then we'd stop, and I'd get out and stretch, and get our message out by talking to individuals, and the media," Hayden adds. He says the idea for the trip was inspired by the cross country trek of Terry Fox made several years ago to make the public aware of the fight against cancer.

Hayden's trip is sponsored by the Adolph Coors Company of Golden, Colorado, as well as the local merchants in Montrose, Colorado, and the service organizations there.

Read expenses for the trip will total about $7,500, Hayden figures.

"We're trying to spark some patriotism in the people we meet," Hayden says of his journey. "When people remember that freedom is something you have to pay for -- it's not just given to you -- then they will begin to accept the Vietnam veterans more.

"Vietnam is still greatly misunderstood. We were just doing what we were told there. When we came back, we weren't looking for any handouts. We just wanted to be accepted, and many of us weren't.

"But," he concludes, "judging by what we've heard in talking to thousands of people since March, I'd say that people's pride in their country, and their acceptance of veterans, is definitely on the upswing."

On to D.C.

In Appomattox, Pamplin

Canneries to open next week

School Community Canneries located in the towns of Appomattox and Pamplin will begin operation during the week of July 2, for the 1994 canning season, according to an announcement made by Lloyd G. Walton, division superintendent of schools.

Appomattox Canning Days for the Appomattox Cannery will be Tuesday, July 5. Canning days for the Pamplin Cannery will be Mondays only until canning volume increases.

Opening day for the Appomattox Canery will be Tuesday, July 5. Canning days for the Appomattox Canery will be Tuesdays only until canning volume demands more days.

Dry weather so far in June has hurt the expected canning season. "It is most important that we operate our canneries as efficiently as possible. "states R. B. Carter, director of vocational education or Appomattox County. "Most counties are discontinuing such services and if we are to continue in Appomattox County the cost of operation must be held as low as possible. By staggering the canning days at both canneries we are attempting to have a cannery available to the county residents for as many days as possible for each week," added Carter.

Prices for cans and other services will remain the same as in 1982. These prices are as follows:

No 2 (pint) - 20 cents each, No. 2 1/2 (quart) - 30 cents each, Grinding - 10 cents per pound, Lard Rendering - 10 cents per pound, Catsup and other products placed in glass jars - $7.50 per kettle.

Families are requested to bring in food between the hours of 8 a.m. and 12:30 p.m. and have all foods ready for processing by 1 p.m. Patrons must bring necessary knives, pans, and other tools for preparing foods as a very limited number of utensils are available.

Lay instructors and other supervisory personnel will be available to instruct patrons in the use of canning equipment as well as to demonstrate proper canning prodedures. Detailed rules and procedures for using the canneries will be given each patron when they register to use the canning facilities.

A total of 12,694 cans were processed in the Appomattox Canneries while Pamplin had a total volume of 10,707 cans during 1983 canning season. These volume figures were approximately fifty percent less than the 1982 canning season, which was very dry. It is anticipated that if weather conditions prove favorable this season that the volume will increase.

Lay instructors who will help with the operation of the canneries this year include Bertha Dickerson at Pamplin Cannery,. Grace Williams at Appomattox Cannery and Ryland Routt assisting both help with the Pamplin Cannery after Aug. 17. Mr. Jesse Morgan, instructor of agricultural education at Appomattox County High School, will be in charge of the Pamplin Cannery and Mr. Barry Sauls, instructor of agricultural education at Appomattox Middle School, will supervise the Appomattox Cannery. Persons wanting information about using the canneries are requested to telephone 248-6191 for Pamplin Cannery and 352-2222 to obtain the Appomattox Cannery during normal canning hours. At canneries may be obtained by calling Jesse Morgan at 352-5602 and Barry Sauls at 352-5390.

Information on either of the two canneries may be obtained by calling R. B. Carter, director of vocational education at 352-8253.

O What Is So Rare As Rain In June? Some folks may think so. Others comment that July and August are really the dry months. Varies a bit under the heading of scattered showers." At the moment, Martha Street is dry, not much growing and I aim to keep water in the bird bath. Gnats are all over. Needing a sign that things will be better, I took hope when I found a penny on the floor at the laundrymat. Things can change in a hurry. Sunday afternoon I noticed that traffic had been virtually nil on our street. Minutes later cars, bikes, walkers were flocking by. If the forthcoming Olympic Games want entrants for an Eating Contest, Martha Street birds should enter.

Veteran, Read about a horse in Eastern Virginia forty-nine years old. Have no idea if that is a record, but I do ask you: how long since you rode a horse?

Seeking something to read, I picked up an old copy of National Geographic Magazine. Turned out to be the April 1965 isue, which was devoted to a feature about Appomattox and the Peace made here in 1865. "How To End A War: Grant and Lee at Appomattox." And written by Major General Ret. Ulysais S. Grant III Illustrated with many pictures. I reread the article and remember all the publicity Appomtox received during the "Centennial". I considered this the best. One detail. Grant's horse was named Cincinnati and the saddle Grant used is preserved at Appomattox Manor. Hopewell.

In answer to a phone call I drove over to Morris Ave., between Dogwood Street and Lombardy and met Mr. Jim L. Collins. A retired carpenter, he was born in Nova Scotia, moved to Massachusetts at an early age, and thence to California, at San Pedro, near Los Angeles. His wife died four years ago and he moved to Appomattox. The purpose of his call was to show me a special poinsettia growing in his home. Odd shape. Given to him three years ago, it is potted with short stalk and branched out sideways about two feet. Very green. He waters the plant every Sunday morning. There is an organ in the living room. He attends our Lady of Peace Catholic Church. Still carpentering, he showed me a neat "bridge" over a depression area in his yard. And as an "extra" he showed ma some of the poetry he composed. A belated welcome to Historic Appomattox. Incidently, Sunday's issue of the Richmond Times-Dispatch had a long feature in the travel section about Nova Scotia.

Back to Gen. W.S. Grant III, grandson of the Civil War general. He was born on July 4 and at West Point was a classmate of Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

Have not seen them all, but of the gardens observed, Curtis Mitchell's looks best. He really works at it and that is the key to success most anywhere.

Thanks for reading and seeya around.
